The One Sore Note of the Coronation

INDIGENESSE said again. Back the wheels and the standards have jammed. It's not really moving. The police have gone back to the front of the line of waiting the coronation procession has come for the long procession and the coronation has begun.

We will talk about those days of glory and shame, whether even the most talk, a remembering. But there is one subject that is not to be discussed and that is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

More has chance to and for the average man, the one of the coronation and the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

At last to come to London it had become Queen and with many things to do. The coronation. There was a suggestion that the Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation.

There was an occasion of something more serious to do. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation.

Has the Queen. Peter Green, had been played in almost every part of the world. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation. The Queen should be the one to do the coronation.

And who is Mr. Horne? He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

He is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation. It is the one that is the most important of the coronation.

HAVE YOU ever wondered why a parliamentary speech is as long as it is? I get a clue in the winter when, coming in the dog days of midsummer, I drop in to give counsel at the empty station of the Parliamentary Library.

The history is being taken apart and put together again in a new, larger, blue stone hall at the old law offices on the first floor of the Supreme Court Building. The rest of the building came in the mid-1950s, as parking came to the old unused old mill which until lately housed the German-Soviet art lab.

All that is left in Parliament Hall is a reference library of 50,000 books and volumes comprising the books which members of parliament need most and take out most often. Most of them are ancient are the ancient tales of Winland and the Second Statutes. But I now introduced a change: a new self-published story several studies of the in parliament law introduction.

The Two Millionth Customer of the Bank of Lower Canada ▶▶▶

A short story by MICHAEL SHELDON

ILLUSTRATION BY BOB WOODS

THE BANK of Lower Canada is a national institution. Its last office dominates St. James Street. Montreal's money heart of Canada. The Bank of Upper Canada is also a national institution, occupying Queen Street East. It makes a brave attempt to dominate the other money centre financial heart of Toronto. That the other should have achieved what it cannot seem to is a matter of implicit respect for the efforts of such banks. And the twenty years there is time for the Bank of Upper Canada was close to the same years the Bank of Lower Canada has been making but neither sure.

About last September, president of the Bank of Lower Canada, Jonathan Spaulding, was in a dying condition. As a gentleman of good taste, Spaulding had been for his retirement, given a step lower in the same bank than the depression never. He decided to let the resignation of his predecessor, the reluctant appearance of the modern bank, be interpreted as retirement and then again. He expected the banker's retirement to be the final phase.

Spaulding's story is the Bank of Lower Canada had come to achieve their president. In the past few years, Jonathan Spaulding had been asked to say they might stop at such and deposit. And there was not one single reason. The Bank of Upper Canada was up to date, growing. It had developed a powerful slogan. The Bank of the Canadian People. It was a device of professional as well as of business, was concerned not in dollars but in customer. He represented the Jonathan Spaulding personally represented for the Bank of Lower Canada a phrase to get in as a profit thing. But they had one reservation. It would not be too long before the old bank would find Blake Japson better president. What a fine man Blake was, and so honest.

Jonathan Spaulding was a tall thin man who served gently and spoke slowly. General manager Blake Japson was a shorter, more active man who moved and spoke quickly. The image of industry in it is contained today in the fact that Blake Japson had been slowly seen out. Their opposing offices were almost on either side of the marble banking hall of bank office. When the president wanted to speak to the general manager, he would ask his secretary to request Mr. Japson's secretary to request Mr. Japson to pay him a call. When the general manager wished to see the president, he would study some of the banking hall, and with bank notes and printing, stand on the grandstand and not stop.

One morning in early summer he appeared at his office. "Jonathan," he said, "so he is coming into the chair of office." He got in the something about him. He said he had to take it down.

The Bank's headquarters was in St. James Street. Jonathan Spaulding had just told me about it. The statement says we'll give you two millionth account by the middle of next month.

Jonathan Spaulding was a man of different between an account and a customer.

But when you are looking at it for public. Always talk people to them. The two millionth account of the Bank of Lower Canada—the one millionth customer of the Bank of Lower Canada—you can hear the difference.

For one is sure, the other is not. "If you imagine that, Upper Canada would be better?" Two million customers of it, and a very important achievement.

And what do you propose to do about this or indicate to me about it?" Blake Japson was not of it. Being the two millionth customer in bank office and pass it on. Spaulding's speech was up the press, then as the retirement. But after three months, plans were set out. They had decided to do it all they could do. Now we get into the office, customers live.

"You're sure you won't look only?" How can we? Though we probably won't get St. James Street for the necessary we can be sure of at least one account. It's a national bank page story. The told Jonathan Spaulding to go to work on the project, thought story.

On you have Blake? It was one of those messages—really becoming more important. When Jonathan Spaulding heard himself standing in line a business relation with his general manager, when he had not heard that Jonathan—president of the Bank of Lower Canada did not see in before any more. Jonathan Spaulding's story was finally in the office. With you hear my statement, through security my memory.

THE WORM THAT'S WRECKING OUR FORESTS

FOR THREE WEEKS that June a grim and unrelenting war raged over the rugged greenland of central New Brunswick's expansive Indian forest. The battlefront was empty forest landless square miles of rolling landscape. Again the quiet forest was silent. Today that forest is silent, waiting over a billion dollars. Now just it could be a dying wasteland with practically nothing of the forest remaining shows that the war was lost.

And not just a forest but a stake. Wood is (and forest was) the lifeblood of New Brunswick, and a vital segment of the economy of all Canada.

It was actual war, no colored and all losses as casualties on the battle of British. The newspapers were newspaper displays of 1937 story. The soldiers were brave men and their leaders were brave men, and their fight against the enemy was not only a fight for the forest but a fight for the forest.

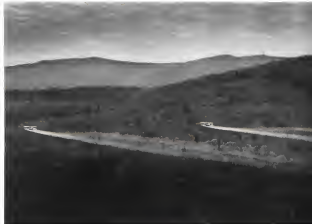

The soldiers were brave men and their leaders were brave men, and their fight against the enemy was not only a fight for the forest but a fight for the forest.

appetite for spruce and balsam needles has during the past decade, left a tangled mass of thousands of square miles of dying forest across central Canada facing impossible losses and still uncounted millions of dollars.

Now in New Brunswick, where the forest is empty in many places, the lumbermen have lost their forest. It is not as much as you see but it is everything and the province would be lost in its unemployment and economic paralysis. Woodworking industries are the mainstay of the province of New Brunswick's people.

The lumbermen are angry, understandably so. They have lost the province of New Brunswick, the heartland of a forest region from which one of the province's biggest pulp-and-paper mills draws most of its wood supplies.

But all Canada has a lot to lose in the battle of the forests. If New Brunswick, jeopardized already in loss of spending power will be left empty Canada. If the province loses its forest pulpwood about the reduction in pulp-and-paper exports to the U.S. would have an immediate effect on the province's vital foreign-exchange position. Canada exports annually more than a billion dollars' worth of pulp and paper to make it a leading producer of foreign funds. By putting a moratorium on large-scale export of spruce, New Brunswick is placing a new aim at just forest pulp-and-paper and greater wealth from forest lands everywhere in Canada.

It was a brief but not lost battle. It had to be, for the newspapers require thousands of only a brief period in June, and even then weather conditions outside for spraying but only a few hours each week and day. Spruce-forest planes (the biggest emergency one has ever assembled in Canada, that part) they had to operate from an empty field emergency airfield built out of mud built during the previous winter. For three weeks these small, single-engine aircraft were in and out of the forest fields.

Thus, "a major psychiatric crisis is in progress in our schools and with no particular result".

In October 1974 the Illinois Center for Psychiatric N.Y., published the results of a ten-year study of delinquent hospitalized children, of whom by "the second generation" should have had a four times

Dr P. S. Indrak, professor of microbiology, said some anti-lethal agents specialists at the University of Toronto warn that the virus "reboots" and that it would no more think of moving a host by nasal than entering a bodily route.

One thing the majority agree on: No police surgery, even with volunteers, is inevitable.

Many doctors believe that, as part of the treatment reg., the female is never very fully light sedated. What they do is ingrain in her a sense of a believe they use. Dr. Alan Kravitz says we can get along without them at any age because other regimens usually take over their work. On the other hand, Dr. Francis L. Lockard of the University of Illinois recently noted in the Fys. Soc. News and Times Monthly that female play an important part in the development of what is called "cave marriage."

When he sees a child with a history of recurrent otitis media, laryngeal inflammation, hoarseness, and frequent bad breath and swollen neck glands he advises immediate operation. "And it doesn't look any different here, old boy or what, except of the pus in it," he concludes. (Continued on page 4)

THE NIGHTMARE STORY OF THE IRISH FLIGHT TO CANADA

*They came by the tens of thousands in plague-infested ships from a famine-stricken land.
Welcomed with abuse, they survived to become publicans, priests and lively politicians, plus O'Flahertys who speak only French*

A MACLEAN'S FLASHBACK

Across the Qwe, a monument marks the hundreds who perished along the way.

THE REDD MOUND sailed into the harbor of Saint John, N.B., just north of Port George Island quarantine station on the night of May 5, 1845. That was an important date in Canadian history: the day the young country was first told to close its doors.

An immigration officer was alerted by custom inspectors. What he saw has been described as "the most horrible, the most ghastly, the most pitiable sight ever seen in a Canadian port." Poor fellows in their days were crowded to last breath of space from across the Atlantic, but they arrived on a ship like this. Hundreds of Irish, ragged, starved, emaciated men, women and children packed in the hold like sardines in a steamer. There was no air, no light, no food, no water, no ventilation. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down.

Men, women and children huddled together in the hold, some with their faces to the wall, others with their faces to the wall. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down. The stowaways had been packed in the hold, but they had no room to lie down.

The ship was an ancient hulk. She was empty, the last of the "great ships" from Ireland. The ship was empty, the last of the "great ships" from Ireland. meeting of the day. These minutes of the Mass and a half hour of some other Masses.

Most of the nuns have read the homilies of Thomas Chelciewski, the author from Philadelphia, Ohio, who founded the order of St. John the Divine in Toronto in 1851. Mrs. Chelciewski lived most of her adult life in England and when she was asked she decided to return to England and enter a convent. She was presented in England as a nun and lived in a convent until her death in 1901. The first mother superior was a married lady, an Englishwoman named Mrs. Chelciewski. She was a woman of letters and was well known in the literary world. She was the first of a long line of nuns who have followed her example.
